LIFE OF FAITH—PART 9

Awareness of the limitations of human judgment leads us to recognize freedom as a condition for living together. But freedom is not everything; it is not even the most important consideration. The root of respect lies in love. If other people think differently from me, is that a reason to regard them as enemies? The only real reason for doing so would be selfishness or the intellectual blindness of people who think that politics and material progress are the only real values. A Christian knows that this is not so because each person has an infinite value, and eternal destiny in God. Jesus Christ has died for each one of us.

We are Christians when we are capable not only of loving humanity in the abstract, but also of loving each person who comes along. It is a sign of maturity to feel responsibility for the tasks which the prosperity of future generations depends on; but the fact about the future must not lead us to be careless about dedication and service in ordinary day-to-day affairs: being kind in a practical way toward people who work with us, living true friendship with our colleagues, having concern for people who are needy even though their misery may seem unimportant in comparison with the grand ideals we are looking for.

To speak of freedom, of love for freedom, is to place a grand ideal before us. It is to speak of one of the greatest riches of the faith. Because-let us not fool ourselves-life is not like a romantic novel. Christian brotherhood is not something which comes from Heaven once and for all for everybody, but rather is a reality that has to be built up each day, in a life which is not easy, with its conflicts of interest, tensions, and struggles, with that daily contact with narrow-mindedness in others and in ourselves.

But if this panorama discourages us, if we let ourselves be conquered by our selfishness, or if we fall into the skeptical attitude of the person who shrugs his shoulders, such failure means that we need to deepen our faith and contemplate Christ more. The only way in which a Christian learns to know himself and to know others is to live every day in such a way that he himself is Christ present among men.
